

S. Dean Green's award makes him
one of top amateur photographers in nation.

The $1,000 Snapshot

Salt Lake Photographer
Wins Top National Award
With Tribune Contest Entry

STILL an amateur but determined to pursue his hobby still further "especially in the darkroom," Salt Lake's $1,000 prize winner S. Dean Green, 2515 Beverly St., estimates that he has taken some 10,000 pictures in his 30-year pursuit of photography as a hobby.

It was Mr. Green who topped the field to win a $1,000 grand award in the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards competition last week in Washington, with a snapshot submitted by The Salt Lake Tribune as a result of The Tribune's annual Summertime Snapshot Contest.

In capturing the grand award for the "Animals and Pets" classification of the national event, Mr. Green topped the field of 396 amateur U.S. photographers who were sponsored by 99 American newspapers.

Since Mr. Green's entry was one of four submitted by The Tribune as a grand prize winner from among some 100 entries which have won prizes in the weekly HOME Magazine contests during spring and summer months, and since the other 98 newspapers sponsored similar contests with as many entries, the Salt Laker's $1,000 prize winner probably emerged at the top of 10,000 to 20,000 amateur snapshot contest entries.

IT WAS on Aug. 21 that Mr. Green's poignant picture of a little black sheep—the "black sheep" of the herd—was selected by judges for a $5 prize in the weekly HOME Magazine Summertime Snapshot contest.

In September, judges sifted through all winners of HOME Magazine weekly contests from January through August, and chose Mr. Green's picture and three others for $25 grand prize awards.

In keeping with The Tribune's exclusive affiliation for the Intermountain West with the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards $15,000 competition, Mr. Green's entry was certified to the national event, along with snapshots by Glenn Ferree, 980 W. 3rd North, and Afton Ruffin, 528 Hollywood Ave., both of Salt Lake City, and Dan Heidel, 318 Nevada St., Gooding, Idaho.

All four emerged from the national event as cash money winners, including $1,000 for Mr. Green and $25 honorable mention awards for each of the other three.

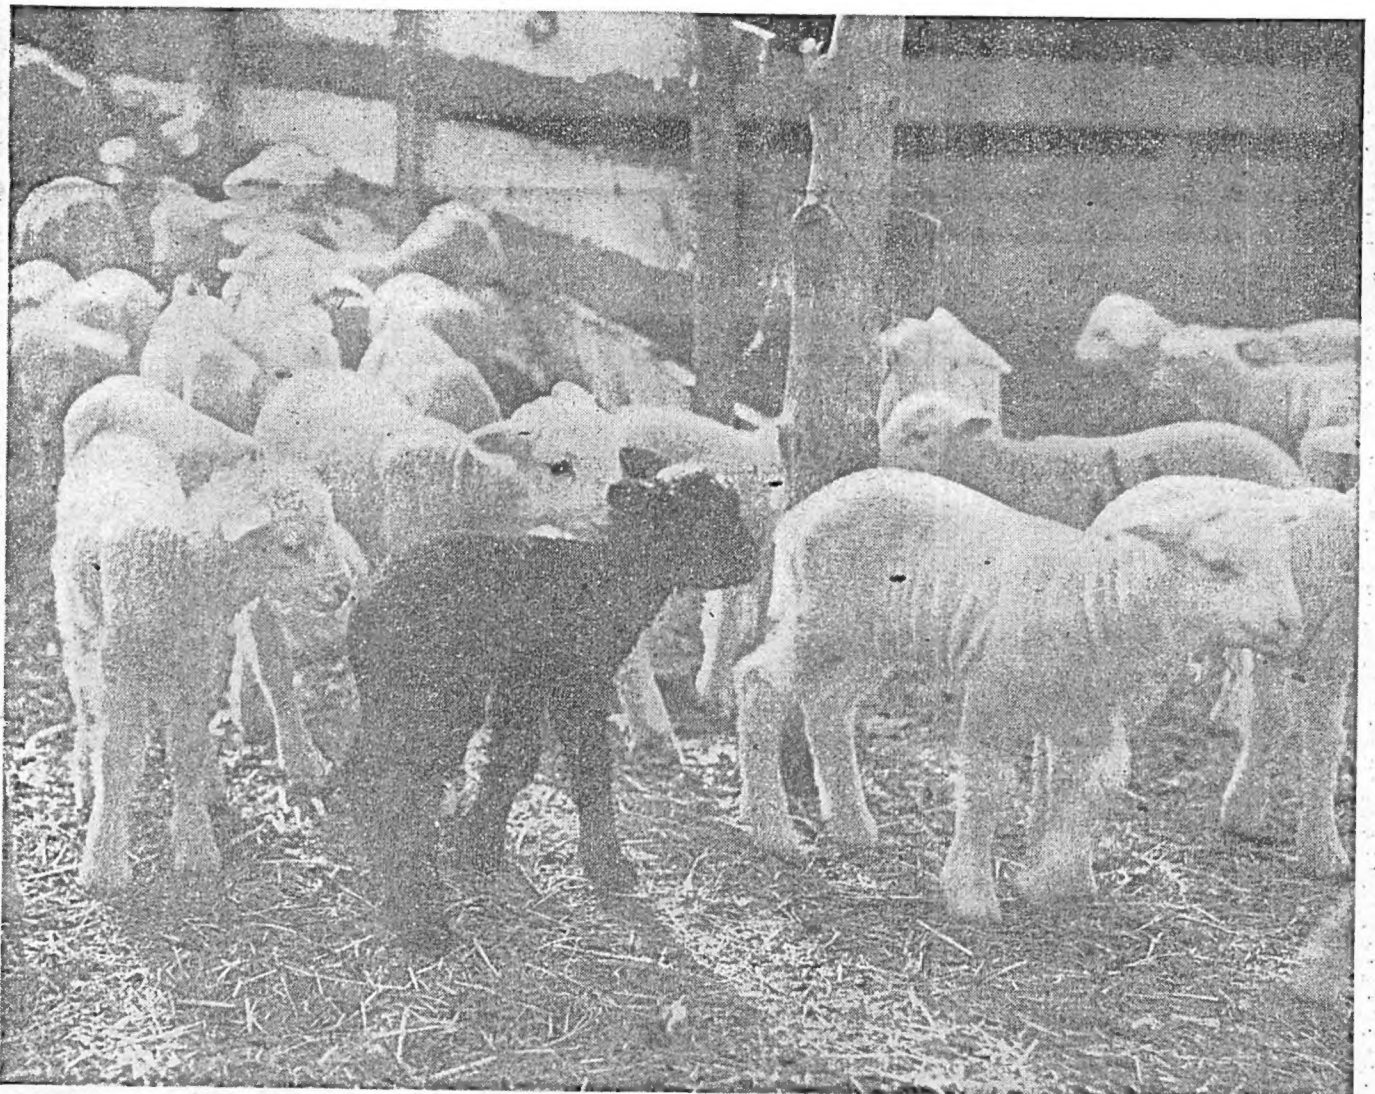

Computing cash value to the contestants, Mr. Green netted $1,030 from his picture, and the others each netted $55 from their pictures, counting weekly awards, Tribune grand prizes and national event purses.

MR. GREEN, an employee of the U.S. Weather Bureau, was in Nevada when his award was announced in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Green, an employee of Tracy-Colins Trust Co., finally contacted him 24 hours later in Winnemucca and informed him.

During a trip to Southern Utah on a spring weekend, Mr. Green saw the band of lambs and managed to snap his winning picture as they were being herded into the lambing pens.

A frequent exhibitor of photographic prints, which he processes in his home darkroom, Mr. Green is a member of the Salt Lake Photographic Print Society. He has three cameras, a Rollicord, and Eastman 35MM, and a Graflex, the camera which he used to snap his winning photograph.

Aside from their market value, these lambs were worth $1,030 to S. Dean Green, Salt Lake photographer.

[Faint, illegible text spanning the upper half of the page, possibly a header or introductory paragraph.]

[Faint, illegible text spanning the lower half of the page, possibly a main body or conclusion.]

S. Dean Green's award makes him one of top amateur photographers in nation.

The $1,000 Snapshot

Salt Lake Photographer Wins Top National Award With Tribune Contest Entry

STILL an amateur but determined to pursue his hobby still further "especially in the darkroom," Salt Lake's $1,000 prize winner S. Dean Green, 2515 Beverly St., estimates that he has taken some 10,000 pictures in his 30-year pursuit of photography as a hobby.

It was Mr. Green who topped the field to win a $1,000 grand award in the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards competition last week in Washington, with a snapshot submitted by The Salt Lake Tribune as a result of The Tribune's annual Summertime Snapshot Contest.

In capturing the grand award for the "Animals and Pets" classification of the national event, Mr. Green topped the field of 396 amateur U.S. photographers who were sponsored by 99 American newspapers.

Since Mr. Green's entry was one of four submitted by The Tribune as a grand prize winner from among some 100 entries which have won prizes in the weekly HOME Magazine contests during spring and summer months, and since the other 98 newspapers sponsored similar contests with as many entries, the Salt Laker's $1,000 prize winner probably emerged at the top of 10,000 to 20,000 amateur snapshot contest entries.

IT WAS on Aug. 21 that Mr. Green's poignant picture of a little black sheep—the "black sheep" of the herd—was selected by judges for a $5 prize in the weekly HOME Magazine Summertime Snapshot contest.

In September, judges sifted through all winners of HOME Magazine weekly contests from January through August, and chose Mr. Green's picture and three others for $25 grand prize awards.

In keeping with The Tribune's exclusive affiliation for the Intermountain West with the Newspaper National Snapshot Awards $15,000 competition, Mr. Green's entry was certified to the national event, along with snapshots by Glenn Ferree, 980 W. 3rd North, and Afton Ruffin, 528 Hollywood Ave., both of Salt Lake City, and Dan Heidel, 318 Nevada St., Gooding, Idaho.

All four emerged from the national event as cash money winners, including $1,000 for Mr. Green and $25 honorable mention awards for each of the other three.

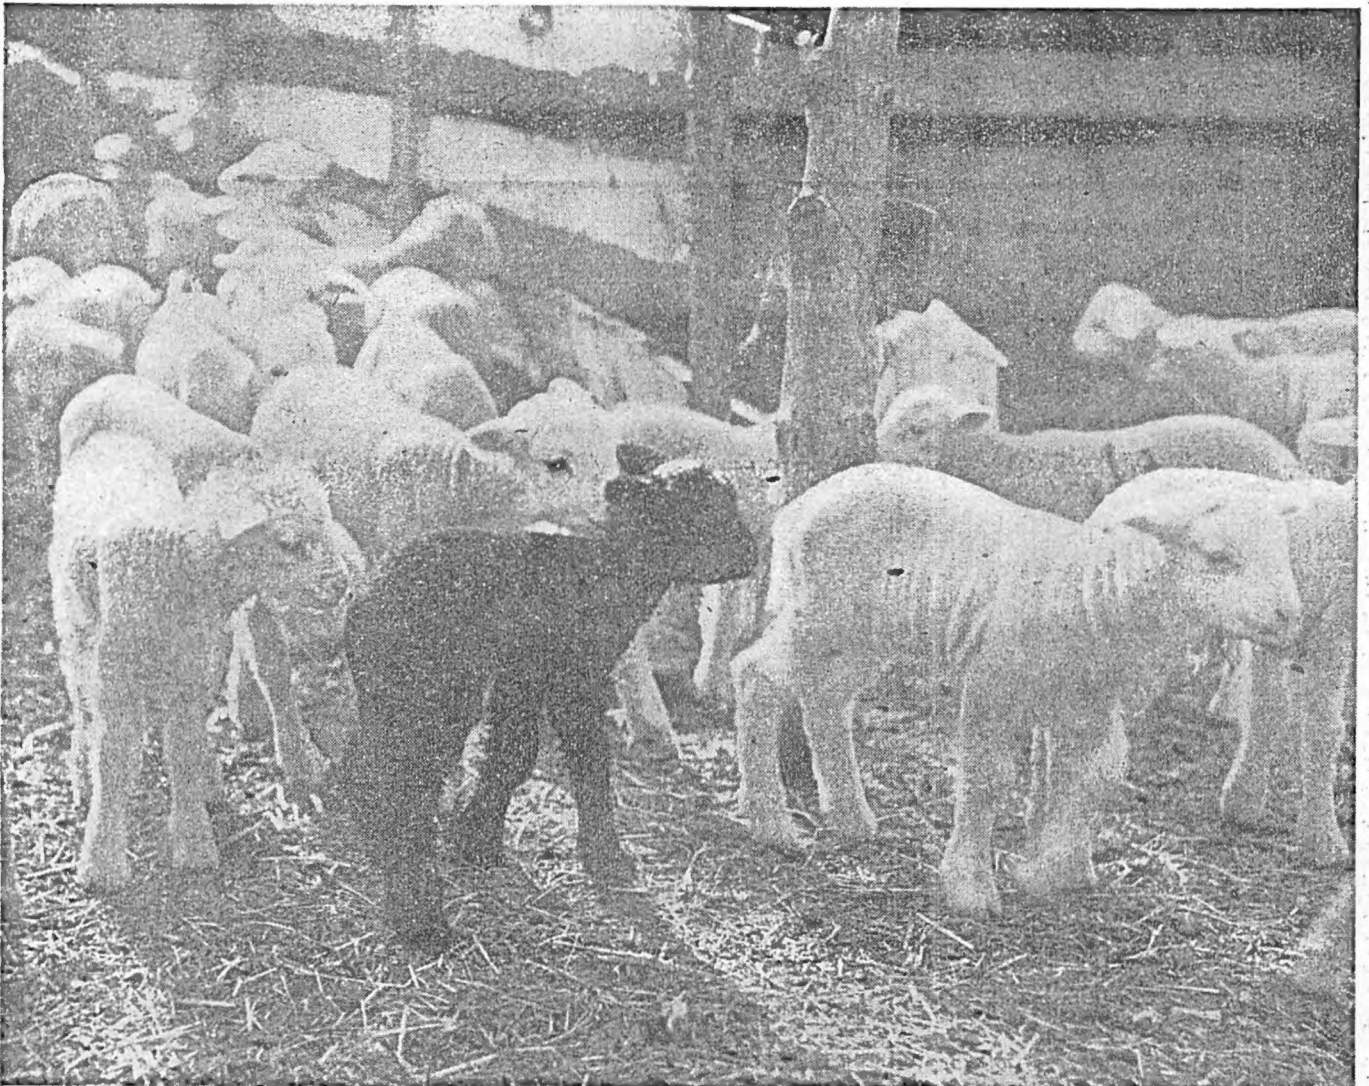

Computing cash value to the contestants, Mr. Green netted $1,030 from his picture, and the others each netted $55 from their pictures, counting weekly awards, Tribune grand prizes and national event purses.

MR. GREEN, an employee of the U.S. Weather Bureau, was in Nevada when his award was announced in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Green, an employee of Tracy-Colins Trust Co., finally contacted him 24 hours later in Winnemucca and informed him.

During a trip to Southern Utah on a spring weekend, Mr. Green saw the band of lambs and managed to snap his winning picture as they were being herded into the lambing pens.

A frequent exhibitor of photographic prints, which he processes in his home darkroom, Mr. Green is a member of the Salt Lake Photographic Print Society. He has three cameras, a Rollicord, and Eastman 35MM, and a Graflex, the camera which he used to snap his winning photograph.

Aside from their market value, these lambs were worth $1,030 to S. Dean Green, Salt Lake photographer.

